May 4th 2011: The Risk of Our Dependence on Modern Intellectual Knowledge

Shigenori Murata is a life coach, spiritual mentor and researcher with a PhD in Comparative Philosophy and Religion from Oxford University. In this episode, he will discuss the risks of our dependence on intellectual knowledge. He will describe his childhood including attending a Buddhist high school. His PhD was based on the teachings of a well-known Japanese Philosopher, Nishida, and he will explain his findings. Shigenori will tell us why it is important to engage in deeper states of consciousness and how we can strengthen our deepest connection. He will talk about the relationship between
